pretty sure it has something to do with the intense radiation spike in the Scandanavian/northern european region meaking it's way down to central europe. The news was trying to tell people that it was okay and no one will get hurt because it's not a high dose. Like fuck it isn't. It's fucking huge. They always say the same shit. Look at Fukushima when it exploded. People were literally banned from going to the hospitals because they thought they had cancer. It's another coverup for a big explosion most likely. Russia probably launched a nuke test and blew up an entire island, at least from what this post is pointing towards.

Yeah a spike in radiation was detected in northern Europe. They analysed it further and came to the conclusion it was some sort of leak from a nuclear plant (i.e. it was man made).

Perhaps simply unintended nuclear mishap of Sub in Mediterranean?
US Admiral warns of the dangers of Russian submarines in the Mediterranean
By Boyko Nikolov on June 27, 2020
Compared the radiation near the Mediterranean in prior anon post, with this:
"Russian submarine armed with Kalibr cruise missiles headed for Syria
•As we reported on June 24 a heavily-armed Russian submarine was monitored on Tuesday, transiting the Bosphorus Strait for the eastern Mediterranean.
•According to maritime observer Yoruk Isik, the Russian Navy's Black Sea Fleet 4th Independent Submarine Brigade's Project 636.3Kilo+ class submarine Rostov-na-Donu B237 has entered Mediterranean waters, armed with Kalibr cruise missiles.
•While the destination for the Russian submarine is still unknown, it is likely to deploy to the coast of either Syria or Libya. Typically, when these heavily-armed submarines head to Syria, they often carry out attacks against enemy forces.."

> intense radiation spike in the Scandanavian/northern european region

It wasn't intense, it was just clearly distinguishable and man-made. The sensors are very sensitive on purpose so that Russian activities can be monitored. They for example registered the elevated radiation after the Chernobyl accident while the accident was still classified information.

I heard thunder rumbling yesterday despite there not being any rain or thunderclouds. Related?

It was three sort of unusually uniform rolling rumblings, and i thought it didn't really sound like thunder.
